- Price £64.32 ■ Claimed capacity 35L ■ Expandable No
- Rain cover Yes ■ Waterproof inner No ■ External pockets 2
- Shoulder strap Yes
- Carry handle Yes

The Givi strapping system is simple to use but does get a bit fiddly when hands are cold, the visor's misting up and all you want is to get indoors quickly. Very secure on the bike though. Capacity is good and it's a practical bag taking plenty of kit in useful pockets for a weekend away. A good example of this type of bag at a reasonable price. It's adequately showerproof and in turn fully waterproof with its ample-sized rain cover fitted.

- Price £127 ■ Claimed capacity 36L ■ Expandable Yes
- Rain cover No ■ Waterproof inner No ■ External pockets 3
- Shoulder strap Yes ■ Carry handle Yes

It's an expensive tail pack, but the performance and features reflect that. Various-length straps included are a bonus for fitment to different bikes and it was straightforward to fit to our Suzuki V-Strom, as its clever locating flap scoops over the end of the rack. Zip top, flip-top makes loading easy, with plenty of capacity plus decent pockets. Very practical for its size. Main compartment has a clip-and-roll internal lining that is fully waterproof.

- Price £95 ■ Claimed capacity 30L ■ Expandable No
- Rain cover No ■ Waterproof inner Yes ■ External pockets 1
- Shoulder strap Yes ■ Carry handle No

Plenty of capacity and easy enough to load – but you're loading into a big, floppy bag. Good size for a few days away but it's a bag to stuff things in rather than place them carefully – so don't pack your best shirt without also packing an iron. The Kriega strapping system works well on pillion seat or rack and pulls bag down very tight and low, so it's very secure and stable. The external pocket leaked but internally it was bone dry.
