

REDANT Motorcycle Cleaner, £7.95 per litre

Datatool is best known for keeping bikes secure with its range of alarms and security products, but now it's branching out into keeping bikes clean. Its REDANT range – written as one word despite the logo showing it as two and bearing an image of a red ant – is led by a cleaner that promises to cut through road/trail grime, traffic film, dirt, sand, mud, oily grime and brake dust. There's also a concentrated version that promises to remove insects plus a range of other cleaners and protection products and a wax for your bike's paintwork.

Weise Bora and Hornet II jackets, £239.99 and £189.99

Colours: Grey/red (Bora) and yellow/black (Hornet II)

Sizes: S-5XL

British clothing firm Weise has released two new riding jackets aimed at hardcore riders who like to ride in all weathers. The Bora (above) is a black and grey three-quarter length jacket with red trim. It has an Isotex breathable and waterproof lining and a removable 140-gram thermal lining. The YKK main zip is covered with a Velcro storm flap to keep the weather out and there's CE-approved armour at the elbows, shoulders and back. The Hornet II (right) boasts a similar specification, but follows the growing trend of high-visibility yellow panels with reflective strips that glow brightly in a car's headlight beam. The Hornet II is £50 cheaper and has a generic zip closure and waterproof/breathable membrane rather than the branded items on the Bora.

not been set yet, but the Soloshot website shows a pre-order price of 399 Euros for the base unit and 599 Euros for a package that includes the base unit, camcorder, memory card, longer-lasting battery, a tripod and a security lock. It says these represent a 300 Euro saving on the European price once the products go on general sale at the start of March.

Givi EA109 leg wallet, £19.40

Riders in warmer countries are big fans of the leg wallet, and now Italian firm Givi has jumped in with its own offering for the UK rider. It sits on the rider's thigh and is secured around the waist and leg. Two pockets store the essentials and make sure they're conveniently situated close to hand, so no need for a bulky and awkward rucksack, or having wallets and keys stored in pockets. The bag is made from 600-denier polyester and boasts reflective piping.

AGV AX8 Naked, £249.99

Colours: Matt black, titanium silver or white

Available: February

Sizes: XS-XL

So many owners of streetfighters and naked bikes asked for AGV's hybrid helmet without the peak that the company has created an official model. The arrival of the Naked means there's a choice of three AX8 models – a basic motocross lid with a peak and no visor, the AX8 Dual that can be worn with or without a visor or peak and now the Naked. Where the Dual requires blanking plates to be put over the mounting holes for the peak if riders want to go without it, there are no mounting holes on the Naked so it has a tidier look. The helmet has a carbon-kevlar shell with removable and washable lining and is approved for both road and racing use.

Touratech Dakar leisure range, from £9

It's 20 years since accessories firm Touratech first linked up with the Dakar Rally, and now the company has released a range of officially-licensed leisurewear bearing the logos of two of the biggest names in rally riding. The Dakar range includes T-shirts, polo shirts, caps, hoodies, scarves, beanies and other items such as mouse mats. The official Dakar emblem takes priority, but the addition of Touratech's branding brings extra credibility with it. The T-shirts and beanies start at £18.16 and the hoodies are £72.84. The cheapest way into the range is by buying a £9 mouse mat.
